Excerpt: .power--not of conscience, but of the Spirit of God. But what tenderness is required, lest we break the bruised reed! Let the wide distinction between the indwelling and the indulgence of sin--between its occasional prevalence and its allowed rule--be accurately marked; nay, even the overruling of its lamented incursions in deepening the contrition, establishing the watchfulness, exercising and strengthening the faith of the afflicted penitent. Let him view the strong encouragement to repeated application to Christ. If he be really mourning over his guilt, and desiring the pardon and love of the Saviour (a frame of mind inconsistent with the least indulgence of sin), he has his promise for the rest of his soul. In bringing his wants and desires to the Gospel, he will find increasing light, consolation, and strength, for the maintenance of the spiritual conflict, until judgment is brought forth unto...
