It is related of Bishop AtterBuby, that after he had been introduced by Lord Berkeley to this amiable man, he lifted up his hands in admiration as Mr. Berkeley quitted the room, and exclaimed: So much understanding, so much knowledge, so much innocence, and such humility, I did not think had been the portion of any but angels, till I saw this gentleman. As a philosopher, Berkeley was perhaps too imaginative and enthusiastic for the purposes of argumentative discussion; but his intellectual powers, were of great compass, and in all the arts and occupations of common life--whether liberal or mechanic--he was versed far beyond the multitude of ordinary practitioners. Berkeley was a handsome man, of a robust constitution, and very strong till his sedentary life had impaired his health. His countenance was expressive, and peculiarly benevolent. The enthusiastic energy of his character, which is displayed in his public works, was also apparent in his private life and conversation. But notwithstanding this animation and spirit, his manner was invariably mild, unaffected, and engaging. It is possible that this anecdote about the Burial lesion may be the manufacture of some lover of coincidence. Dr. Drare, however, who cannot be followed with too implicit a deference in all matters connected with the writers in these volumes, relates it without suspicion. Yet Dr. Aikin, in his Biography, says that it was a sermon of Sherlocrs. There is room to doubt, --The bishops complaint...
