Excerpt: . . . Enter Primitive and Mrs. Belford. Prim. Now do, for my sake, pray, pray justify yourself. Mrs. B. Sir, I have told you I am slandered. Prim. Well but consider, what Mrs. Gabriel fays is persectly true; I know nothing of your history, she does; and if I should defile this innocent abode, by introducing to it a person of suspicious character--Mrs. B. Suspicious! Prim. Pardon me; these were my nieces words, not mine: and when (he added, her husbands constancy might be corrupted--Mrs. B. Corrupted! and by me!-Sir, I can only answer, I am innocent; and if this be doubted, let me be gone. I know, by losing you, Ive lost my best, my only friend; but if you think Id be indebted for roy safety to those who say I would disgrace my benefactor, and mar connubial and domestic love, you know but...
