Excerpt: . . . when they are not up to grade. so why not be as watchful on the other hand It is iiot nearly so much the fault of principals. who can form only a superficial estimate at best in a single conversation or test. The teaclicr is the one who should discover if a new pupil is heyond his grade. We do too much wholesale teaching. A teacher should try to remember that each child has a personality of his own, a life to live, and a right to have his individuality recognized and respected. Vlieii she does that. she is less likely to be ignorant of the capabilities of the children she teaches. I shall be more careful after this in my observation of new pupils. said Miss Ward. It had never struck me what an injustice it might be to grade a child too low. You always give me something worth while to think about in our litle talks. Send Katie to me and Ill do all I can for her. laced. and Y THIS title I mean, of course, utilizing the B daily reading lesson in such a way as will bear directly u on progress in speaking and writing English. here is nothing novel in this suggestion. But let us try to get a fuller view of the subject, and see if we cannot do more vital work in language and literature because of our extended horizon. Alertness on the part of the...
