Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: .wonderfully in Paris and a big banquet was held in their honor just before they left. The time was short in Paris, in fact too short, as there was a big track meet scheduled in London between the British Empire and the United States. This meet was held at the famous Queens Club track and was really a big society event. As is customary in the English meets, only the firsts counted, and those for only one point. There were ten events on the program and each country won five, so there were no hard feelings at the end of the day's sport. A great crowd attended and, as is characteristic of the English people, every winner received a great ovation. It certainly made one feel good just to be at that meet, whether he won or not. After this meet various groups were formed and some went to Sweden, some to Scotland to participate in track meets, while others went to visit relatives or sight-seeing or to be entertained by their English friends as only the British people know how to entertain. For those who stayed in London, there were various dinners, theatre parties, and the like, which were furnished by the Englishmen in charge of athletics in London and thereabouts. After about three weeks of London and travelling around, the last of the visiting athletes had returned to these shores and were back in college, or at their jobs. So the Olympic Games...
