One Winter s night, - twas long ago, The ground was mantled deep with snow, The crackling faggots shed a glow Around an ancient hall. Stout crossbows, spears and matchlocks, too, Old suits of mail; as bright as new, And relics of the chase a few, Adorned each oaken wall. A father sat in antique chair, His beard was long, and gray his hair; His three fair boys were sitting there Beside the cheerful fire. Come, boys, said he, I pray you say, In frank and open, manly way, Where, each, your thoughts and wishes lay - To what your minds aspire.
